Cable Tow

A cable tow is usually attached to a Mason's robe. In the ancient days, cable was a strong rope used to tie together with heavy objects on a raft.

A tow was also a rope used for pulling objects. A cable tow, therefore, was a robust heavy rope used for binding and pulling objects.

In Freemasonry, the cable tow is a visible symbol of a person's pledge to the craft.

It represents a vow that a Mason will fulfill his duties and help a fellow brother to his full capability. The length of the cable tow indicates the extent to which a member is willing to go to assist a fellow Mason.

That's why the length of a cable tow is significant in Freemasonry.

The cable tow can be related to the cord that unites a mother and child during birth.

After a child is delivered, the physical bond between them is cut and replaced with unconditional love.

During initiation, the cable-tow is removed from the recruit because the vow taken on the altar is stronger than a visible tie. It becomes a moral constraint bounding a person to brotherly love in the craft.

The bond becomes a two-way traffic where a person is linked to a Freemason, and a Freemason is bound to the person.
